I appreciate the sound text provided by the original authors, Isa Engleberg and Dianna Wynn. It made a solid base for the adaptation of the Canadian edition. Thanks also goes to David S. Le Gallais, acquisitions editor, and to Pearson Canada for this opportunity to adapt Think Communication for the Canadian college student.

I appreciate the confidence shown to me as I worked through the process of adapting an already important communication text. Throughout this process, Katherine Goodes has supported me, answered my questions, and most significantly guided me as a first-time author. I am truly grateful for her expertise and kindness. The manuscript benefited greatly from the help of the developmental editor, Katherine Goodes; project manager, Susan McIntyre; and copy editor, Tara Tovell.

My husband, Tom, has always encouraged me to reach beyond my comfort zone to accomplish my dreams, and for this I thank him. My daughters, strong remarkable women, Christine and Alison, continue to inspire me to keep learning and growing. My colleagues at Centennial College energize me every day with their commitment to providing excellent learning opportunities for all students.

Finally, I want to thank all of the amazing college learners I have met over the many years of teaching. Their diversity, questions, and challenges have all helped me to become a better listener and communicator, and each semester they assist me in refining my own teaching practice.
ISA ENGLEBERG, Professor Emerita at Prince George’s Community College in Largo, Maryland, served as president of the National Communication Association (NCA) in 2003 and chaired the NCA Research Board from 1995 to 1998. She has written six college textbooks in communication studies, published more than three dozen articles in academic journals, and made hundreds of convention and seminar presentations. Dr. Engleberg received the Outstanding Community College Educator Award from the NCA and the President’s Medal from Prince George’s Community College for outstanding teaching, scholarship, and service. She has focused her professional career on improving both the content and teaching of basic communication courses at all levels of higher education as well as teaching and consulting internationally.

DIANNA WYNN is a professor at Nash Community College in Rocky Mount, North Carolina. Previously she taught at Midland College in Texas and Prince George’s Community College in Maryland, where she was chosen by students as the Outstanding Teacher of the Year. She has coauthored two communication textbooks and has written articles in academic journals. She served as an officer in the Community College Section and a member of the Legislative Assembly of the National Communication Association and has participated in dozens of convention programs. In addition to teaching and college service, she has many years of experience as a trial consultant, assisting attorneys in developing effective communication strategies for the courtroom.
MARIA ROBERTS has served on the faculty at Centennial College in the Early Childhood Education program for nine years. During this time she has also assisted in the development of the post diploma online courses. She has presented many workshops for early childhood education professionals on a variety of topics including team building, facilitation, motivation, and conflict resolution. She has also spent 30 years working as part of multi-disciplinary teams in college and community settings. Her committee work includes the Centre for Students and Their Families (Centennial College) and the Scarborough Special Needs Committee for Children. Maria is a certified early childhood educator and resource teacher and has a certificate in volunteer management from Conestoga College. She is currently completing her bachelor of arts in adult education at Brock University.
Dedicated to Violet, Hannah, Wyatt, Sophia, Ella, and Lena. They will be the leaders of tomorrow and they will communicate in ways we can’t even imagine today.
